

How Long Can a "Bad Scene" Hang On?

Childhood Trauma in Adult Art,
Literature, and Film
Lenore Terr, M.D.

Lenore Terr's field studies of battered and kidnapped children have defined the standards for the study of childhood post-traumatic stress disorder. She holds the highest research awards in American psychiatry and was given a prize for child advocacy by the American Psychological Association.

Monday, November 10, 4:10 pm
214 Light Hall

Sponsored by the 2008/2009 "New Directions in Trauma Studies" Fellows Program of the Robert Penn Warren Center for the Humanities